Anna Janssen (1998) studied Arts, Media and Society at Leiden University. During her bachelors she followed the minor Heritage & Design at the Faculty of Architecture at the TU Delft. Here, her interest in architecture and urban development grew. Therefore, she chose to focus on architecture after finishing her bachelor's degree and enrolled in the master program Stadsgeschiedenis (Urban History) at the University of Amsterdam.

During her studies she discovered a growing interest in writing.

She started exploring this interest by doing several internships focusing on writing and editorial work. Currently, she is practicing these skills as a working student at BLOC.

Arriva

How can Arriva's public transport services integrate more effectively with urban planning developments in the Netherlands? We have been helping this international organisation strategise on this issue since last summer. The first step was a creative session with the Europe-wide public transport company in which we brainstormed to find answers to this question. The case study explored was the region of Midden-Holland.
